

The Linux Audio Conference in Karlsruhe, Germany, is an annual event where notable developers and users from all around the world present free software, current developments and general talks on topics such as Software Sound Synthesis, DSP Algorithms, Sampling, Recording, Composition and more.

Several concerts and a musical event called the "Linux Sound Night" present the practical side of working in the Audio domain under a free and open operating system.

At the conference, the ZKM offers free Internet access (RJ45 and WLAN). Additionally, the presentations will be streamed live to the Internet. All talks will be held in English.

After the presentations, there is enough time for ad-hoc meetings and discussions. Also, special interest groups have the option to use rooms at the ZKM for conversations and demos.

The backside of this flyer contains the current programme, subject to change. For the up to date programme, please see the web page.

About ZKM - Institute for Music and Acoustics

As a cultural institution, the Center for Art and Media (ZKM) in Karlsruhe and, in the field of Computer Music, the Institute for Music and Acoustics holds a unique position in the world. It responds to the rapid developments in information technology and today's changing social structures. Its work combines production and research, exhibitions and events, coordination and documentation.

About LAD

"Linux Audio Developers" (or LAD for short) has its roots in a mailing list serving as a meeting point for developers and users of free and open audio and music software. Today it has become a synonym for Linux Audio subjects of all kinds, including events like this or an appearance at the "LinuxTag", Europe's largest expo on Linux matters. The LAD homepage is at <http://www.linuxdj.com/audio/lad>.

Admission to the presentations and workshops is free, but on-line registration on the conference web page is requested. Concert tickets will cost 3 EUR / 5 EUR.

For further information (travel directions, accomodation, live audio stream addresses etc), please visit the web page at www.zkm.de/lac

If you have a specific question, please e-mail us at lac2005@zkm.de

Center for Art
and Media

The Linux Audio Conference 2005 is sponsored by

